I rate this book 4/5 stars

Just from reading the first 41 pages I have learnt much about the leading protagonist "Harriet Manners". One of such is that she has no desire whatsoever to be accepted by popularity. She finds that her corner of the world is comfortable just the way it is, even though her current profession allows her to be watched under the attentive eyes of the public. Which in fact she never really intended to happen... Within the first book you are introduced to the well-loved characters and experience a journey of highs and lows as well as new beginnings, giving you the experience to feel what the life of living teen may feel like sometimes, giving maybe not in the same circumstances or maybe it's the opposite you might have started a new career and feels like everything is bubbling up inside you making you as though it may all be too much.

Otherwise known in the book, you will meet various new and old characters along the way, some even reminding you of yourself or those you know. From this you see how important those around you are, always knowing what to say and the right things to do. Especially at moments like this when time with our families and friends means so much more to us. And the bond we share with our close friends and family is replicated within the book, making us the reader love the characters even more.
